

Cumulative doctoral theses

General terms

- Listed here are details extracted from standardized policies and copyright agreements that are freely available online. However, we do not assume any liability for this information and generally recommend checking the publishing contracts again with regard to copyrights.
- In case you have agreed to deviating terms with the publisher please check your copyright agreement and follow the respective terms. To obtain permission to use a different version, shorten the embargo period, or the like, contact the publisher. Most publishers handle permissions with help of the RightsLink service by the Copyright Clearance Center.
- You always have to give a proper, full citation and use the DOI to link to the published version.
- Some (not all) publishers have different policies for self-archiving and re-use depending on the publication type: journal article or book chapter. While this list focuses on policies that cover journal articles some policies for book chapters are also included. Please check carefully whether the described policy applies to your type of contribution.
- If your article was published open access under a Creative Commons Licence, there are a wider re-use options.
- For an explanation of the terms preprint, postprint etc. go to the page Self-archiving.
- Prior publication regulation: Many academic publishers nowadays accept articles for publication, even if they have already been published online as part of an open access dissertation. Similar to how preprints are treated, online dissertations often also do not count as "prior publication" according to many publishers's policies. see also: Discussion document on best practice for issues around theses publishing (by the Committee on Publication Ethics)

Publishers' policies on cumulative doctoral theses

The following table gives an overview of the most important publisher's policies on integrating content into doctoral theses.

Provision of ETH Zurich

According to the valid Doctoral Regulations and the Implementation Regulations of ETH Zurich, the use of the published article version (publisher's version pdf) is not allowed.
